TWO CENTS

MEMORIAL DAY WILL BE OBSERVED IN CHARLEROI

Hon. Henry W. Temple Has Been Secured to Deliver the Address

EXERCISES IN THE MORNING

Memorial Day will be fittingly observed in Charleroi, and at such an hour as to permit citizens, if they so desire, to spend the afternoon elsewhere, after paying a tribute to the soldier dead of their country.

Through the efforts of a committee, headed by Miss Minnie Richardson, arrangements have been made for Hon. Henry W. Temple, member of Congress from this district, to be the speaker for the occasion, while it is expected that a parade by former service men will precede the exercises which will take place at the Honor Roll, McKean avenue and Fifth St.

The hour fixed for the parade has been set at 10 o'clock a. m., and the speaking hour 10:30. Mr. Temple has been engaged for several months to be in Monongahela in the afternoon, and he could only accept the Charleroi engagement, which he was pleased to do, with the understanding that the local exercises would not conflict with his date in our neighboring city.

A special feature of the exercises will be the children's chorus of about three hundred voices under the direction of Prof. I. T. Daniel, which will render patriotic songs.

The suggestion to properly observe the day met with ready response on the part of our citizens, and it was without difficulty that sufficient funds were subscribed to take care of all expenses. The committee asks that all former service men take part in the exercises, promising that the program will be finished in plenty of time for them to attend the dedication of the monument at Monongahela if they so desire. All citizens are also asked to manifest their patriotism by a display of flags.

The full program for the day will be announced by the committee of arrangements within a few days, and a list of the committees having charge of various details announced.

FISHERMAN'S LICENSE BILL IS APPROVED

The Stadlander fisherman's license bill was approved on Tuesday by Gov. Wm. C. Sproul and from January 1, 1922, all persons over 21 years of age who fish in Pennsylvania waters except those who fish in waters in or abutting on their own property, must pay a state license of $1, with 10 cents to the county treasurer issuing the license. Licenses surer issuing on forms prepared by the Commissioner of Fisheries. County treasurers are required to keep a complete list of all such licenses issued and forward them each week to the Commissioner of Fisheries at Harrisburg.

MONESSEN "FIRES" ITS CHIEF OF POLICE

Monessen council finally agreed on the proposition to drop Chief of Police Coover from the pay roll of the borough and that office is now being filled temporarily by Lieutenant Larson. Who will be chosen to fill the position is not stated. The police question has been a live one in Monessen ever since the fall of 1919 and the inability of council members to agree upon a definite policy has cost the taxpayers considerable money. Citizens now expect the force to be reorganized and put on a more efficient basis.

MASKED THIEVES ATTEMPT ROBBERY

Mrs. Edward Ross, who is past 80 years of age, and who lives in Rosetown township, back of Grandview cemetery, would have received rough treatment at the hands of three masked men, who broke into her home about 2 o'clock Wednesday morning, had it not been for the timely arrival of neighbors, who had been summoned by her grandson, Lloyd Ross.

Mrs. Ross was awakened at an early hour Wednesday morning by three masked men, who were in her room on the first floor and who demanded that she tell them where she kept her money. Mrs. Ross insisted she had none in hiding, but the robbers refused to take her word for it and began to torture her. Her screams awakened her grandson, who slept on the second floor. Two stairways lead to the upper rooms in the house, and when the young man started down one, the robbers, who heard him, started up another pair. When the boy reached the first floor, he got hold of a gun and fired it, but the robbers responded in kind. Mrs. Ross, who had followed the men upstairs, managed to lock them in a room and then the boy went for help.

On his return with a number of neighbors it was found the robbers had cut their way to the roof, when fire was opened on them. They returned the fire and quite a gun battle ensued, but the marauders got away. It was a very exciting and painful experience for Mrs. Ross, but the thieves got nothing for their efforts.

Badly Injured when Rock Crashes Thro Windshield

Jack Clark is confined to his home on Washington avenue, suffering from severe injuries received Wednesday evening, when a heavy rock thrown by some one crashed through the windshield of the truck he was driving, and struck him squarely in the mouth. His upper lip was split, a long and deep gash cut on the inner side of his lower lip, one eye blackened and his shoulder injured, while Miss Edith Riley of Roscoe, who was on the front seat with him, had her ear cut by flying glass.

In the truck at the time were a number of members of the graduating class of the High school, who had been holding a picnic at Oakland Park in the evening. After the festivities at the park a number of the members of the class boarded the Clark truck for a short spin out the cement road. It was while they were on the return trip that the rock was hurled through the windshield, and which inflicted such severe injuries on Mr. Clark. At the time, they were passing a dam which was being driven in an opposite direction, when the rock came hurtling against the windshield, breaking it into fragments, and striking Clark in the mouth. The truck was at once stopped by one of the other occupants, and the injured young people taken to the Brown home, nearby, and a telephone message sent for Dr. McKay, who responded at once. He gave medical and surgical attention to both of the injured, both of whom were brought to Charleroi at a later hour.

It is said the team from which the rock is alleged to have been thrown belongs in Charleroi. After the injured had been looked after, some of the young men of the party took the truck and started in pursuit of the team in order to discover the identity of the driver and to see who were with him.

The injuries to Mr. Clark will keep him confined to his home for several days, but Miss Riley's injuries are not of such a serious character. What prompted the act of throwing the stone at the truck has not been ascertained, but likely a close investigation will be made.

Change in Method of Placing Names Hereafter the names of candidates of all elections will appear on the ballot in the order determined by lot. Governor Crow signed the Crow bill on Wednesday abolishing the present alphabetical arrangement.

The changes were recommended by the bureau of elections. Chief of the bureau Thorne stated the change in the ballot to the new form will mean additional work by that bureau, but will be a fairer test for the election of a candidate.

The names will be filed with the secretary of the commonwealth as nominees, and lots will be cast for positions on the primary ballots. The arrangements is then made by the secretary for the official ballot.

MORE MEN PLACED AT THE DONORA MILLS

The 8-hour day was placed in effect at the Donora mills on Monday, and it is reported that quite a number of additional men have been put to work in the big down-river plant. There appears to be a more optimistic feeling over the industrial situation, and it is reported the steel corporation has a large number of orders on their books, which will receive immediate consideration because of the recent wage adjustment, which went into effect on the 16th of the month. It is also said that additional open hearth furnaces at the Donora plant will be placed in operation within a very short time.

Officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad are quoted as saying that a few brakemen will probably be taken from preference freight trains and a number of front brakemen from passenger trains, but that not more than 12 freight brakemen and 23 passenger brakemen will be relieved at this time. The same authority says that on the Middle Division of the P. R. R. the front brakemen on 27 trains, including solid Pullman, mail and express, will be relieved. In the same order twenty regular men are reduced to extras and an equal number laid off.

MEETS WITH AN AUTO ACCIDENT

Mr. and Mrs. Goodloe Thomas of Monessen, while out driving in their automobile Wednesday afternoon, met with an accident which might have had serious results. As it was Mr. Thomas was badly scratched, while Mrs. Thomas was severely and painfully injured. For a time it was thought the injuries to Mrs. Thomas were serious, but later it was ascertained that she had fortunately escaped a fatality.

At the time of the accident Mr. Thomas was driving his car on Knox avenue, and was turning on to Ninth street in Monessen. At that point there is a steep embankment, up which the car dashed, and was placed at such an angle that it turned completely over, catching both Mr. and Mrs. Thomas under the machine. The car was badly damaged and was brought to the Spencer garage in Charleroi for repairs.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Thomas are well known in Charleroi, and while their friends will be sorry to learn of the accident, yet will be pleased to know that the injuries sustained are of a somewhat minor character.

J. M. McKee, County Farm Agent, will be Principal Speaker

TO DISCUSS IMPORTANT TOPIC

The Farmers Committee will hold a Forum this evening at eight o'clock in the Municipal building. Every member of the Chamber of Commerce has received a personal invitation to attend this Forum, and in addition about seventy-five farmers have been invited. J. M. McKee, the agricultural county agent of Washington, Pa., will be the principal speaker. Short speeches will be made by Jos. Haube, Teho. J. Allen, Miss Minnie B. Richardson, Prof. I. T. Daniel will lead the community singing.

The subject will be the "Curb Market" or "A Short Cut from Producer to Consumer." It will be shown in the course of the discussion just what has been done along this line in other cities, and the advantage that would be derived to the consumers of Charleroi as well as to the surrounding farmers if such a market can be established.

It is hoped that the public, and especially the members of the Chamber of Commerce, will attend this Forum and take part in the discussion. The desire is to have open meetings of this kind frequently, as the committees of the Chamber have been sufficiently long at work to have discovered certain topics in the "Program of Work" that need to be discussed by the membership at large.

The Welfare committee met Tuesday evening in conference with representatives of the Red Cross, the hospital, the Associated Charities, the Boy Scouts, and other kindred organizations. The Charleroi-Monessen Hospital had the best representation, and a great deal of enthusiasm was shown in behalf of this institution. After the plan of federation was discussed and after many questions had been asked and answered, it was decided that each representative should lay the plan before his or her organization and that this group would meet again on May 31st, with full power to act, and that the federation would take place at that time.

Joseph Haube, chairman of the farmers' committee, and J. S. Heffner, Secretary-Manager of the Chamber of Commerce, made a tour Wednesday afternoon of the farmers in the vicinity of Charleroi in the interest of the curb market. Many of these farmers were met while engaged in work in the fields and were quite ready to talk about bringing produce to Charleroi both for the Agricultural Display this fall and for the curb market. The farmers are also quite ready to talk about the price of milk and they sometimes waxed eloquent in telling why the price of milk should not be lowered.

There will be a good attendance of farmers at the forum meeting this evening and they have promised to take part in the discussion.

ANOTHER LITERACY TEST

There is much to be said against the existing immigration literacy test, which lets on anarchistic agitators and bars out honest laborers, but there is much to be said in favor of a citizenship literacy test such as is proposed in the State of New York. Next fall the people of the Empire State will vote on a constitutional amendment providing that after January 1, 1922, "no person shall become entitled to vote by attaining majority, by naturalization or otherwise, unless such person is also able, except for physical disability, to read and write English." Such a ruling would disfranchise no voter now qualified, and merely provides that in future all who attain the ballot shall be able to read and write English, their native or adopted country's language.

It would seem to be unnecessary to argue that such a provision is desirable in any State with a large population writing and speaking only foreign languages—except for a few words of English picked up and employed in emergencies. Without a knowledge of English how can the foreign born gain an understanding of American principles and ideals and thus be put in the way of becoming the right sort of citizens? How otherwise can they be weaned from their foreign political sympathies and made to vote with America's interests rather than foreign-country interests in view? This New York proposition seems to be the most practical plan yet suggested for the Americanization of immigrants and checking the foreign-sympathy voting which has caused so much trouble. In view of what he gains through the grant of American citizenship, it is little to demand of the incoming foreigner that he first learn to language of his adopted country.

SERVICE EVER.

With characteristic energy, Gen. Wood has set himself to the task of finding out the truth about the Philippines. Immediately upon landing at Manila he, with former Governor W. Cameron Forbes, began the taking of testimony. Morning and afternoon sessions were arranged for each day, and all persons desiring to give the commissioners their views on Philippine affairs were invited to speak. "Our instructions," said Gen. Wood, in a preliminary statement, "were to come to the islands and make a full, fair, impartial report upon conditions for President Harding, and not necessarily to find any fault with the Filipino people." The report that the general will submit will be the first reliable information on the Philippines, and the ability of the Filipinos to govern themselves, that the country has had in many years. It will be of inestimable value to the President in recommending a policy toward the islands.

DEBTS AND DEFICITS

Editors everywhere are applauding the President or his firm stand against future deficiencies. If his cabinet heads faithfully follow his wishes it will mean a saving to the taxpayers of hundreds of millions of dollar a year. On April 30, 1921, the public debt of the United States was $23,995,564,776, approximately what it has been for about a year. What would the figures have looked like had the Republican Congress of last year consented to grant the establishment of the Democratic administration, which were about a billion and a half over the sums actually appropriated. In the preceding year the estimates were a billion over the appropriations.

INSPIRATION ON THE WING.

Great Compositions That Seem to Have Been Awaiting the Moment of Their Birth.

Charles Kingsley returned home one night rather dejected because a sermon he had preached that day in a little had proved a little too "socialistic" for the incumbent. Instead of going to bed he paced back and forth in front of the fire, and his wife knowing he was composing, left him and retired. In the morning he related to her that moving lyric:

There others went and set it into the west,
And then the best as the best went down."

There is a table in the porch of Wrexham church, to the memory of Bishop Heber, which records that the most popular of all missionary hymns was composed in it. Heber, who was the son of a farmer, happened to be staying at the vicar's as with his father, a Jew, Dr. Shopley, dean of St. Asaph's, who was to preach a missionary sermon on the Sunday.

Heber and other friends were assembled in the library on the Saturday, when the dean asked his son-in-law if he could write something for the service next morning. Heber retired to the further end of the room for the purpose and at the end of 15 minutes he read the first three of the four verses of which the famous hymn, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," consists.

The hearers were delighted, but Heber said the sense was not complete, and devoted another five minutes to the fourth stanza.

CAN NOT HIDE WEAKNESSES

Philadelphia Writer Draws a Moral From the Life and Works of Two Men

There were two men.
One, in order to hide his faults from the eyes of the public, surrounded himself with many friends, better than himself in character.

The other man had a single friend, as sterling in character, sympathies and perceptions as himself.

In the first case the man fooled the public, which seemed to see him through his friends.

In the second case, however, the man and his friend were misunderstood and neglected by the public.

The first man, during life, was praised and flattered for being very wealthy, he could very easily purchase empty words, but not love or respect.

The second man, after death, was at last understood, respected, honored and loved, but to no avail; for he could not be brought back from the grave.

It was a case of the same old story—of an unjust, blind world.
Moral—Armor will not hide one's weaknesses.—Charles Fagerman in the Philadelphia Record.

Thoroughbreds and Jackasses.
The Baldwin locomotive works got an order for a monster locomotive. It was shipped in fifteen days.

"How did you do it?" one of the officials was asked.

"Organization," he responded. "Organization is the art of getting men to respond like thoroughbreds. When you click to a thoroughbred he gives you all the speed and strength of heart and sinew he has in him. When you click to a jackass he kicks."

Here is an illustration worth while, which surely applies to men as well as lower animals.

A wonderful thing is the ability to respond with complete efficiency when called upon.

And a more wonderful thing is to be able to get other men to respond that way when you call upon them. That is what the great men of industry—as well as of war—have been able to accomplish.—Gulf Coast Lumberman.

"There are extraordinary sarcasms in coincidences," says Alexander Black, author of "The Seventh Angel" and "The Great Desire." "One night a thief made off with my overcoat from a restaurant. It was not the sort of restaurant in which one is admonished to be alert. Moreover, I had never been robbed of anything in my life. I had had no admonitory experience. Naturally the incident made a rather profound impression. The weather happened that impression."

"That same night I happened to open my Bible to verify the location of the verse from which I took the title of 'The Seventh Angel.' And in the verse immediately preceding I read these startling words: 'Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments.'"

Monroe Was Jefferson's Secretary.

Although James Monroe, who was to become one of our most famous Presidents, played his part in the Revolutionary war with gallantry, and was wounded at the battle of Trenton, it was after that wound had forced his retirement to private life that he set his real start on the path that was to carry him to fame. Upon receiving his wound the young man, who had previously been promoted to a captaincy by Gen. Washington, returned to his home in Virginia and took up the study of law. He entered the office of Thomas Jefferson, who was then governor of Virginia. Jefferson had a large library, and inspired Monroe with a desire for study. The two formed a great attachment, and Jefferson made the young man his secretary.

On August 28, Sheets and two other young men of Fayette City, were paroled for two years on charges of breaking and entering a pool room in Fayette City and stealing a small amount of money. Sheets was paroled on conditions that he would refrain from the use of intoxicating liquors, keep out of the vicinity of Fayette City, keep employed steadily and pay a specified amount to the support of his child who is living with the mother in Cleveland, but who is divorced from Sheets. Peculiar Whistling Tree.

Travelers in Nubia and the Sudan have heard many weird stories of the whistling tree that is heard when the wind blows, but investigation developed the fact that on the soft shoots at the extremity insects lay their eggs, the development of which leaves a small opening through which the wind makes a sound that gave rise to the belief that the tree had a musical property.

AUTO BUSINESS SEEMS TO IMPROVE

W. B. Risbeck, of Donora, who is distributing agent for the new Haynes '50' car, was in Charleroi on Tuesday on a business mission. He had just recently returned from Kokomo, Ind., where he had gone for the purpose of securing a number of cars in order to supply his trade. On arrival there, however, "Bill" found that if he expected to get any machines to bring back home he would have to camp on the job. He remained over four day and managed to get four cars, which, however, had to be taken from the shipment of another agent. These cars were driven overland from Kokomo, to Donora, Charleroi men being the drivers. Mr. Risbeck says the Haynes plant is working both night and day in order to keep up with the demand now being made for this popular car. While he was there he saw the departure of a trainload of autos from the Kokomo factory for New York, one hundred railroad cars being required to carry the shipment.

Never have WASH FROCKS been more Youthfully Fashioned

Fairly bursting over with the gaiety of Summer are the intriguing tubable Frocks in this advance collection. The tight little bodices made to seem all the more slender because of the bouffancy of the skirts are piquantly set off by brief puffed sleeves, and collars and cuffs of massmer thinness. Irregular hem lines are adroitly attained by means of floating panels; tailored tunics which open at the necks of tucking and flared chief drapes.

Prices begin at $4.75 and up to $34.75

BELLS OF BUDDHA

Their Tones Vary With the Tastes of the People.

Continuous Symphony of Tinkling in Rangoon and Mandalay—Japanese More Stern in Tone.

The bell is almost as characteristic a symbol of Buddhism as is the seated figure of Buddha himself. It varies, in the different Buddhist countries, with the temperament and tastes of the people. In Burma, where even Buddhism turns to sunshine and to prettiness and the towers of the temples evaporate in lace work and jewelry, the bells, glittering with precious stones, hang in clusters from the umbrella-like top of the pagoda spire and ring at their own sweet will. In the temple courts of Rangoon and Mandalay there is a continuous symphony of tinkling and chiming things—dainty, casual, wayward.

But the bells of China and Korea and those of Japan are more grandiose and sober. Like the stained-glass windows of European cathedrals, Japanese bells are storied records of their temples and their times. They bear inscriptions by famous poets and scholars; they are molded into a wealth of symbolism. And around them cling, like the moss and flowers that have overgrown the woodland Buddhas of Nikko, legends and tales and history that live on the lips of generations who have dwelt in the shadow of some great bell and whose lives have been unconsciously attuned to its grave and somber harmony.

Yet, though the imagination of the people clings around it, the temple bell seems to speak most eloquently from lonely places, from the heart of monastic woods, from heights to which the contemplative may withdraw for meditation. It has none of the familiar and sociable character of the occidental church bell. Though Christianity, like Buddhism, has understood the value of the bell, the difference between the bells of East and West is typical of a difference in the genius of the two faiths. In the cities of England and northern Europe the bell is the first to speak out on any occasion of special significance to the people. It announces funerals, weddings, fires and wars. It is at its best in the expression of communal joy. The very method of ringing—in carillons, chimes and joyous changes—makes it seem a representation of many voices raised in a chorus of gladness.

The Buddhist bell has none of these social characteristics. It could hardly quicken its deep tone to speak of joy. It seems a voice apart from temporal things, cognizant only of eternity and Nirvana. Yet on any occasion of general sorrow its accent—tranquil, remote, unburied—may be immeasurably comforting. An American who lived in Kobe while the epidemic of influenza was at its worst often speaks of the comfort he felt in the sound of the temple bell from the hill. All day he saw the procession of the dead pass his house and stroke of the crematories dimming the sky; but every night at nine o'clock the great bell spoke out—serene and gracious on the evening air—and its grave voice seemed to be saying: "Fret not; for all this passes. It is well."—Marjorie Latine Barstow in Asia Magazine.

Ceilings Made of Newspapers.
The demand in Manchuria, China, for old newspapers is very great. These are used principally for the first layer of paper on interior walls and ceilings of houses. Chinese houses in Manchuria invariably include no ceilings when completed, the ceilings being installed by the tenants or owners after the masons and carpenters have completed their part of the contract. The ceilings are made of a framework of miller staves, which are, as a rule, first covered with old newspapers and then with a layer of Chinese white paper. Partitions made in the same manner are also largely used in both shops and dwelling houses. Previous to the war old papers from abroad sold at 4½ cents a pound, while the prevailing price for Chinese and Japanese paper is now 3½ cents a pound.

When his mother told Warren she was going to buy him a dog and asked him what kind he wanted he said: "I want one with a long tail, so when he's happy he can wag it."

Better Not Try It.
If a man lived to 100, and played whist nightly, he would never be able to hold all the possible variations in "hands." There happen to be 655,361,717,720 hands.

Could Alleviate That.
This patient also claims to have a broken heart. "Well, we can help that, too. Give him that pretty nurse."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

LAKE OF FIRE NEVER QUIET

Spectacle Furnished by Hawaiian Volcano May Well Be Said to Be Everlasting.

Hawaii's lake of everlasting fire has never been quiet so far as little local records or traditions testify. That is, not quiet for any length of time.

It covers itself with a black sheet of lava which looks like a vast carpet of a shagreen. This black covering, however, completely hides the lava, and angry red lava then it cracks and splits with startling noises, breaks in to edges which sink into the burning lava, and the motion lava of the lake is again in connection. The whole strange performance, as I recall, the freezing over, the breaking up, the renewed billowing of fire, takes less than ten minutes.

The lake so called, is an opening a hundred yards or so wide in the floor of the crater, which is eight miles in circumference. It can be compared to a hole in ice; the crater floor, at places of black, hardened lava, is in physical character like rough shore ice, the surface of the lake like water kept in commotion by wind, except for the periodic freezing over. The five lava of the lake rolls in waves which break against its shore, sending up smoke, which, blown from the top of the waves, hardens into hair-like glass. The natives call this glass "Pele's hair," that lady being the Goddess of Fire.

Little wonder that the excellent dancer who sat on the edge of the lake in wonder and terror piously answered one who asked him what the lake was like: "Brother, it's a hell of a hole!"—New York Sun.

DENIES CROW IS ALL BAD

Said That May Be Said to Have Few Friends Finds a Defender in Eastern Writer.

Volunteers have been written about the crow, remarks a writer in the Chicago Science Monitor. He is famous—yes, and infamous, to not a few of his biographers. Thus he resembles Napoleon. Further, he resembles Napoleon in his complete self-reliance, his cosmopolitanism, and his many-sidedness. The crow is our comrade, or least bird. He is typical of the class aves. Frequenting our average or general environment and climate, he has adapted himself to the requirements of that average surrounding in an all-around manner. He is about a mean proportional in size between the humming bird, and ostrich. He can fly enough, walk enough, wade enough. His beak is long enough, strong enough, round enough, curved enough, so that little which is food defies his efforts at utilization. He does not object to hot summers, wet springs, dry autumns, and icy winters. And, in line with this almost Grecian equilibrium of faculties, experts studying his economic status have at length concluded that his virtues about balance his shortcomings in this field also.

Temples Reveal Character.
People with "lumpy" temples—the cheek and frontal bones almost covering the temple space—are stolid, unimaginative and slow in thought and action. To set against those defects, the above type of temples is that which is big, white and flanked with small, well-formed ears. That is the statesman's temple, the author's temple, the temple of the "big man." Orators and noted preachers have this temple. The character indicated is justness, generosity, kindness and a great capacity for forgiveness. This, too, is the long-life temple. Those with temples, which, owing to the shape of the skull and the growth of hair, look high and unduly narrow, are geniuses, with great incentive power, but of erratic temperament. This type of temple is not usually a long-life one.

Well, this at least may be said of the author's business. Though the machine-made product pile up sales—and dollars—in authorship even as in mercantile trade, it will never make one permanent reputation. Neither will the card index mind that consistently denies the real creative impulse. The creative impulse may make money or it may not—it is incalculable and unconquerable. But any writer who lets it fume unutilized while the central office of his mind conducts a coldly intellectual business purely for profit is bound to wake some fine day to find the sudden havoc it has made of all his careful diagrams and codifications. And the last state of that man shall be worse—and just possibly better also—than his first!—From the weekly editorial of the Literary Review.

To Garble.
While modern custom permits the use of the word "garbled" in the sense of selecting the worst and not the best parts of a story, yet the use of the word in this sense is incorrect. The word originally meant to cull out and select the most suitable parts and to reject the worst and least suitable parts. It is therefore incorrect to speak of a "garbled statement" in the sense of a mutilated or dishonest statement, for formerly in London the name "garbler" was applied to officers appointed by law to look after the purity of drugs and spices, and the term "garbled" was applied to such articles only after they had been examined and freed from impurities and improper admixtures.

ANCIENT TALE OF CREATION

According to the Chippewa Legend, Menabosho Was the Originator of All Things.

According to the legend of the Chippewa Indians, Menabosho was the creator of all things. He avowed one day that he would make the earth. He reached the sea between his powerful hands until it grew into a great ball. Then it floated on the water with the sea to form land, and he sailed, making it about a great rock, which he called a still larger ball, says the Chippewa story in the Boston Transcript. Menabosho then undertook to divide the living things which dwell on the earth. The first bear escaped from its under, leaped to the earth and bounded straightaway across the North American continent. But the land where the sprawling bear's huge paws struck the earth was still so fresh and soft that they left deep tracks.

These deep marks quickly filled with water. Scarcely had the frightened bear bounded away when the beautiful lakes—Superior, Michigan, Huron, Ontario and Erie—appeared, full to the brim. They are as old as the first bear's tracks.

The creator now hastened to make rain. At sight of the water filling the lakes he began to fear lest the sea again fall in a heap; and he caused the rain to fall from the sky so long that the lakes overflowed toward Erie, the track of the foot which struck first and settled under the bear's weight much lower than the others—the water, on its way to the sea, dropped abruptly from Ontario into Erie. And to the Falls of Niagara!

BEAUTY DESCRIBED BY POET

Word Painting of Sunset on the Arno Brings the Scene Vividly to the Mind.

It was sunset on the Arno; far down the river, over mountain ranges where the sun had faded, a water tint, half rose and half amethyst, gleamed along the horizon; beside the low parapet that bordered the street, people were loitering back from their afternoon promenade at the Casino; here a soldier, now an Englishman on horseback, and then a bearded artist; sometimes an oval-faced contadino, the broad brim of whose finely woven straw hat flapped over eyes of mellow jet; and again a trim nurse with Saxon ringlets, dragging a petulant urchin along; and over all these groups and figures was shed the beautiful smile of parting day, and by them, under graceful bridges, flowed the turbid stream, the volume doubled by the spring freshets. I surveyed the panorama from an overhanging balcony, where I stood awaiting the appearance of a friend upon whom I had called.—Henry T. Tuckerman.

Most Ancient Weapon.

Back in the dim reaches of prehistoric ages, no one packed a sword unless it was the saber-toothed tiger. But soon, primitive man began to evolve his crude cleavers out of every sort of material, from the jawbone with which Samson fanned the Philistines to the shining steel with which the Assyrians cracked down, "like a wolf on the fold." Some very serviceable slashers were swung by the Greeks after they had exhausted their ammunition, which consisted of spears. One of their favorite modes of combat was to mount their chariots and dash by one another, chucking javelins. In the event no bull's eyes were made, they would leap to the ground and draw their swords, the survivor, as in the case of the procedure of Achilles with Hector, making fast the body of the vanquished to the rear of his chariot and ordering the charioteer in a clear, commanding voice, "Home, Jansens."

It is good to read, mark, learn—but it is better to inwardly digest. It is good to read, better to think—better to think one hour than to read ten hours without thinking. Thinking is to reading (if the book read have anything in it) what rain and sunshine are to the seed cast into the ground the influence which maketh it bear and bring forth, thirty, forty, an hundredfold. To read is to gather into the barn or storehouse of the mind; to think is to cast seed corn into the ground to make it productive. To read is to collect information; to think is to evolve power. To read is to lay a burden on the back; but to think is to give to the feet swiftness, and the hands strength. Yet we have a thousand or ten thousand readers for one thinker, as the kind of books sought after in circulating libraries bears witness.

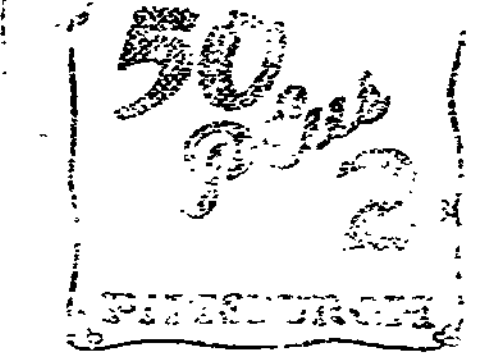

The Razor in History.
The next time your razor slips remember that it was Scipio Africanus, the great Roman, who was the first to institute the custom of shaving daily. Which observation brings us to the subject of shaves and beards in general. Who took the first shave? Nobody knows. The answer to the question, who wore the first beard? is more simple. Adam, of course. Something is known of the beard of Belshazzar, the ancient monarch who "made a great feast to 1000 lords." Belshazzar used a curling iron, and has frequently been pictured with a beard full of curls. To users of henna powder it ought to be a comfort to know this monarch used gold powder on his beard.
